

Dr. Faith Harris

Public Lecture: Who Cares About Climate? A Religious Response to the Climate Crisis

Dr. Harris's visit is Sponsored by the Blakely Fund, the D. L. Jordan Endowment, the Environmental Studies Department and the Benne Center.

Think religious people don't care about the environment? Dr. Faith Harris will surprise you. In this lecture on the climate crisis, she uses both personal experience and academic expertise to show the unique perspectives and useful resources that people of faith can bring to the topic of climate change. Dr. Harris is visiting from Virginia Union University in Richmond, where she teaches in the areas of systematic theology, womanist theology, creation care, grassroots organizing, and the faith community.
